Course Description:

English 230 focuses on the art of American film from its beginnings to the present. We will examine the ways in which American movies have coded gender, race, and social class in their virtual worlds and explore the cinematic systems such as screenwriting, cinematography, and editing that constitute the medium and encode its message(s).

There are no Prerequisites. Course Requirements include:

Purchase of eBook of Looking at Movies
eCampus readings and discussions and eReserve movie viewings
Class attendance and Open-Mic contributions
Norton InQuizitive interactive reading checks
Take-home midterm and final exams
