

Global Feminisms

ENGL 226: Non-Western World Literature
Dr. Rose Casey | Spring 2021

This course will likely be delivered online.

Women around the world have been telling powerful stories for millennia. Contemporary female writers have documented their experiences, contributed to the global rise of feminist movements, and helped create largescale improvements in the way they're treated.

Through a series of incredible literary works, this course explores the differences and commonalities in what women's rights means across the world

Assigned texts will include novels, poetry, short stories, and essays by writers from Zimbabwe, Senegal, Antigua, Mexico, India and Jamaica.

We'll also study important essays by feminist theorists who connect gender to race, ethnicity, class, migration, faith, and globalization.

By the end of the semester, students will have gained a richer understanding of women's lives around the world, including how women of the Global South improve their own lives.
