English 309/509: Approaches to Teaching Composition

Dr. Sarah Morris (smorri10@mail.wvu.edu)
Tuesday and Thursday, 11:30-2:45

“I won’t be ruled by tests I don’t believe in. I won’t be told how to teach writing by people who never write. My students and I are the most powerful forces in the classroom, not the tests.”
—Penny Kittle, Write Beside Them

English 309/509: Approaches to Teaching Composition is a combined level methods course designed for certifying future teachers of writing, in which graduate students take a leadership role. In it, we will explore underlying theories and foundational principles that inform what we know about writing instruction; we will research attitudes and techniques for pedagogy; we will experiment with methods of teaching writing; we will develop our own processes and identities as writers and teachers of writing.

Because writing helps us to know what we think, to articulate what we know, and to make meaning in a community, will write daily, individually and collaboratively. Because accountability standards pervade teaching realities today, we will prepare for working toward those standards and still preparing students as writers in the world.

Course themes:
- Being a writer; teaching writing
- Process and practice
- Pedagogies of place
- Assignment and unit design
- Responding to and assessing writing
- Writing workshop and peer response
- Digital literacy and argument writing

Course work:
- Exploratory writing
- Writer’s notebook
- Practice teaching
- Reflective responses
- Process model/mentor texts
- Research and theory book group
- Unit plan OR ethnographic research

“Engaged writing and reading, practical minilessons, close reading of poems, a diversity of genre studies, letter-essay critiques of books, editing protocols, and individual editorial conferences more than satisfy, for example, the Common Core State Standards.”
—Nancie Atwell, In the Middle

“Because writing can support a high level of learning in all subjects, it matters in any classroom where inquiry, knowledge, and expression are valued and recognized by students and teachers.”
—National Writing Project, Because Writing Matters